Description of research lines:

The Research Group, which until 2019/12/31 had the name "Zero Energy Building and Urban Regeneration for Climate Friendly Cities", investigates the technical, procedural and methodological issues of technological design and energy retrofit/restoration, with a multidisciplinary and multiscalar approach (from urban landscape and open spaces, to building materials and components), as well as with circular and regenerative methods, for the improvement of energy-environmental performance of the built heritage, enhancement of the passive bioclimatic performance of the building, reduction, rationalization and optimization of primary energy consumption, integration and use of energy from renewable sources and definition of innovative technological solutions and, at the same time, innovative use of traditional technological solutions. A specialist focus is given by the role played, in this system, by innovative bio-based materials, whose application in the architectural field is possible if not desirable from the point of view of the "cradle-to-cradle" approach as an opportunity given by technological progress in order to orient the construction sector towards environmentally conscious behaviour. The compatibility analysis allows to define for each material the limitation of the carbon footprint, embodied energy and identification of the environmental load capacity, which can be defined as the ability to absorb and control the phenomena of environmental transformations with a sustainable impact for the ecosystem.

The activities of the Research Group are part of the national SITdA-nZEB Cluster, to which 54 lecturers from 16 different Italian universities belong (<http://www.sitda.net/index.php/cluster/nzeb.html>).
